Being a team leader has some requirements

Team leadership is about employee motivation, but also about daring to make demands and have ambitions. You have to ensure everyone feels involved and acknowledged while keeping everyone on the same page to successfully reach your collective goal. In TEAMLEADER the participants try their hands at being the leader in a true to life scenario. Here they're creating a motivating work environment, handling internal conflicts within the employee group as well as living up to the management's demands and expectations.

TEAMLEADER is an effective tool for leader development

In TEAMLEADER you're acting as the newly employed head of the department. You have to get a dysfunctional employee group to become well-functioning while you're still providing results for the management and handling any unexpected trip-ups during it.

If you want to do well in the game, you have to thoroughly communicate your knowledge, experiences, and assumptions on both good and bad leadership. Through the game, you're prompted to reflect, which makes new knowledge and shared experiences fuse together, so you both learn with and from each other. That ensures the game can both be used as a tool for personal leadership development and as an inspiration for participants at an event or workshop.

"I don't think I've ever experienced another learning tool that conveys such great and relevant knowledge in such a short time-frame and in such an engaging way."

Steen Suhr-Knudsen
Project Manager, Gentofte Kommune

How TEAMLEADER effectively trains your leadership abilities in a minimal amount of time

1. The participants experience a simulated practice of what they're good at and what they need to work on.
2. The game facilitates a process that integrates communicating knowledge and sharing experiences while still being deeply serious yet fun and engaging.
3. By creating a fictional world that is close to reality, it becomes easier to discuss work-related problems that occur in pressured situations.
4. It's well documented that we learn a lot better when we're experiencing things rather than simply listening! That's why the game's an effective tool for training leaders.

TEAMLEADER is self-facilitating and takes around two hours to complete, including an introduction and any subsequent debriefing and reflection. One game can be played between 3-6 players.

TEAMLEADER is developed in collaboration with experts in leadership and the game company Copenhagen Game Lab.
